

AMA Journal of Ethics®

April 2017

Volume 19, Number 4: 317-409

Moral Psychology and “Difficult” Clinician-Patient Relationships

From the Editor

Interrogating Assumptions about “Difficult” Patients and Situations 319
James Aluri

Ethics Cases

Do Physicians Have an Ethical Duty to Repair Relationships with So-Called “Difficult” Patients? 323
Commentary by Micah Johnson

How Should Physicians Respond When Patients Distrust Them Because of Their Gender? 332
Commentary by Monica Peek, Bernard Lo, and Alicia Fernandez

How Should Clinicians Respond to Medical Requests from Clinician Family Members of Patients? 340
Commentary by Andrew Thurston

Podcast

Rethinking So-Called “Difficult” Patients:
An Interview with Dr. Autumn Fiester

The Code Says

AMA Code of Medical Ethics’ Opinions Related to Moral Psychology and “Difficult” Clinician-Patient Relationships 347
Danielle Hahn Chaet

Medical Education

Reflection-Based Learning for Professional Ethical Formation 349
William T. Branch, Jr., and Maura George

Courage and Compassion: Virtues in Caring for So-Called “Difficult” Patients 357

Michael Hawking, Farr A. Curlin, and John D. Yoon

Repairing “Difficult” Patient-Clinician Relationships 364
Denise M. Dudzinski and Carrol Alvarez

In the Literature

Forty Years since “Taking Care of the Hateful Patient” 369
Richard B. Gunderman and Peter R. Gunderman

State of the Art and Science

Lessons about So-Called “Difficult” Patients from the UK Controversy over Patient Access to Electronic Health Records 374
Federica Lucivero

Policy Forum

Roles of Physicians and Health Care Systems in “Difficult”
Clinical Encounters 381
Elizabeth S. Goldsmith and Erin E. Krebs

History of Medicine

How Navigating Uncertainty Motivates Trust in Medicine 391
Jonathan B. Imber

Images of Healing and Learning

Nested Tensions in Care 399
Artwork and captions by Merel Visse

About the Contributors 406